SINTER is engaged in interdisciplinary research. Educational researchers and social scientists collaborate to investigate how social inequalities and disparate educational opportunities emerge and are reproduced along constructs of difference such as ethnicity, language, socio-economic background, gender, (dis)ability, age, and other social attributes. This year's conference provides an in-depth look at current SINTER projects. After each presentation, visiting educational researchers and social scientists will provide comments, and panels of experts will follow through during subsequent discussions.
